

South Carolina Cookbook

The South Carolina Cookbook was originally published in 1953 by the South Carolina Council of Farm Women and has since been revised and/or reprinted at least eight times. The name of the organization has changed since then to South Carolina Home Demonstration Council, South Carolina Extension Homemakers Council, South Carolina Association for Family and Community Education, and now, to South Carolina Family and Community Leaders.

The purpose in preparing the original cookbook was not only to present many of the recipes used in the state, but also to provide the principles of cooking which preserve food value and quality of foods. The recipes were contributed by members of the organization and other interested parties throughout the state.

South Carolina Family and Community Leaders hope you will make daily use of the cookbook in preparing wholesome, nutritious meals for your family. Brides found that a copy of the original cookbook was a welcome wedding gift. Today it makes a great house warming present, a must for a silent auction item and cherished gift for friends.
